

PARTICIPANT EDITION

KEIPI CRASH COURSE

© KEIPI RESTAURANT

INTRODUCTION

Welcome to the table!

The time is nearing for you to attend a Supra. Such an exciting event to look forward to! The Supra is an ancient Georgian toasting feast that has persisted through time up to the present.

In this crash course, you'll learn about how the toasting event works. You'll learn about the Tamada, or toastmaster, and the Merikipe, the wine pourer. You'll learn a bit about how to toast and what makes a toast good or bad.

As a participant of the table, there's nothing to worry about but showing up with an open heart. But we hope that by learning a bit about the Supra, you'll be able to enter into the experience more fully.

But first, we must offer you a toast, to you, the guest at the Supra!

To you, the guest:

Many things must come together in order for a Supra to unfold: a table large enough to carry an abundance of food and wine; a Tamada to lead the toasts; a Merikipe to pour the wine. But with no guests, there is no Supra; no one to enjoy the feast and the company, no one to receive and offer new toasts, and no one to receive the hospitality of the host and the Tamada.

Joy comes into the world through giving, but with no recipient, how can a gift be given? So to you, the guest, may you be open to the gift of the Supra, and may you discover the joy of vulnerability and offering yourself to all who gather around the table.

Gagimarjos!

USEFUL VOCABULARY

During the Supra you'll learn some Georgian words that are part and parcel of the event. The Tamada will explain some of the vocabulary, but you can get a headstart with some basic words below:

Supra სუფრა	A formal toasting feast from the Republic of Georgia. At a Supra you will encounter bountiful food, wine, music, poetry, and a series of participatory toasts led by a Tamada. The tradition dates back millennia and is still common today, to celebrate anything from weddings to funerals to religious holidays. Supra literally means “tablecloth”.
Keipi ქეიპი	A party. In America, we use the term to refer to a casual Supra. In Georgia, it's common to see three men sitting around a bottle of cha cha , making very short, informal toasts. This is a Keipi. Pronounced “kay-pee.” Keipi is also the name of an incredible Georgian restaurant in Greenville, SC.
Tamada თამადა	The toastmaster who leads the table on a journey, exploring life's deepest themes while giving everyone a sense of belonging. A Tamada is an orator, leader, jester, poet, listener and confidant. Pronounced with stress on the first syllable.
Merikipe მერიქიფე	The Tamada's helper and wine pourer. In Georgia, the Merikipe role is highly honored. Etymologically, “mere” means afterwards and “keipi” means party, implying that the Merikipe's time to feast is later on, presumably as a reward in the afterlife.
Sadghegrdzelo სადღეგრძელო	A toast made by anyone at the table. When somebody wants to make a toast, they say, “Tamada, may I have a sadghegrdzelo ?” The etymological meaning of “sadghegrdzelo” is something akin to an appeal for longevity, as each toast causes the night to prolong. You can pronounce it “sagradzelo.”
Alaverdi ალავერდი	A special toast wherein the Tamada asks a particular participant to offer a toast. In Georgia, Tamadas will often name the theme to toast to. In America, Tamadas often ask the participant to set the new theme with his/her toast, thereby passing the “Tamada-ship” for one round of toasting. “Alaverdi” is also the name of a famous monastery in the wine region of Georgia. The word is likely Turkish in origin, meaning God “Allah” gave “verdi”.

Gagimarjos
გაგიმარჯოს

Literally, “May you be victorious.” Exclaimed by all participants after each toast. In Georgia, you will hear gaumarjos, meaning “Victory to it,” and gagvimarjos, meaning “May we be victorious.” Shen gagimarjos may be said to a person who finishes a particularly magnificent or meaningful toast.

Vakhtanguri
ვახტანგური

A toast named after the legendary King Vakhtang, wherein two people link their right arms and drink from khantsebi, or ram’s horns. Receiving a Vakhtanguri is a great honor, celebrating heroism and establishing a deep bond of kinship.

Ghvino
ღვინო

Wine, symbolizing the blood shared by all participants. Georgians claim, and archeologists affirm, that viniculture originated in the Georgian lands 8,000 years ago, and is therefore taken very seriously.

Bolomde
ბოლომდე

Bottom’s up. To finish one’s glass as a sign of respect, often done after the fifth toast to the departed. “Bolo” means end and “mde” means until.

Cha cha
ჭაჭა

The common Georgian hard alcohol, made from distilled solids leftover from wine production.

Qvevri
ქვევრი

A large ceramic egg-shaped vessel which is traditionally used for wine fermentation. Crushed grapes are placed in a qvevri (sometimes 8 feet tall) and then buried underground.

Madloba
მადლობა

Thank you

Gamarjoba
გამარჯობა

Hello

Nakhvamdis
ნახვამდის

Goodbye

THE TOASTS

What is a toast?

A toast sits somewhere between a declaration and a prayer. It is a speech that both unites and uplifts everyone gathered. The best toasts are made to themes relatable to all and can be endlessly explored. The action of a toast is to celebrate, never to disparage or cause division.

How does toasting work at a Supra?

Like a Christmas tree, the Tamada offers a theme, or a universal pattern, and participants then decorate the tree with instances and particularities of the pattern. A Supra may be likened to a friendly poetry contest, with participants “one-upping” the Tamada and each other with more elegant and heartfelt toasts.

A toast may vary in length, anywhere from a few words to a minutes-long story. The total number of toasting themes will depend on the table, but generally there will be at least seven and up to twenty-five, give or take. Five toasts is the bare minimum: without five toasts there is no Supra.

Step by step:

Step 1: Tamada toasts. When the Tamada stands and clinks a wine glass, participants should give the Tamada their full attention. The Tamada announces a new toasting theme and delivers a toast, after which everyone exclaims “gagimarjos!”

Step 2: Participants (that’s you!) toast on the theme. After the Tamada’s toast, the table may go back to conversation. This is when you may ask the Tamada for a sadghegrdzelo, stand up and bring the table together. It’s important that you toast to the theme presented by the Tamada. For example, if the Tamada toasts to friendship, it’s best not to toast to competition, unless of course you can tie competition into friendship. (Poetry at work!)

Step 3: Tamada moves to a new theme. After some time, the Tamada will clink a glass and move on to a new toasting theme.

Example of a toasting round:

Tamada: “I’ll now make a toast to parents. Perhaps some of you can relate to me, when I say I didn’t have gratitude for my parents until I had my first child. We’ve all been hurt by our parents in one way or another, sure, some of us worse than others. But let’s remember the love our parents had and have for us, the parts of them that wanted nothing but the best for us. Without our parents we would be nothing, so thank God for the people who raised us. Gagimarjos!”

Participant 1: “Tamada, may I give a sadghegrdzelo on the theme of parents?”

Tamada: “Caroline, yes, please give a sadghegrdzelo.”

Participant 1: “I want to toast to my father, who coached me in basketball for many years of my childhood. I thought he was hard on me from time to time, but looking back, I’m really thankful for the competitive spirit and appreciation for camaraderie he gave to me. To my father, Tom, gagimarjos!”

Participant 2: “Tamada, I also have a toast to parents...”

Good vs. bad toasts:

A good toast is generally vulnerable but not overly sentimental, elegant but not flowery, not overlong but not terse, respectful but not stiff, funny but not irreverent. Here are a few examples of good toasts and bad toasts:

Bad Toasts	Good Toasts
On the theme of women
“To our wives and girlfriends... may they never meet.” Why? It’s best to avoid “pirate toasts” – cliché toasts that you can find in a quick Google search. There is little depth or vulnerability	“Ted, this is a toast to your mom, on your birthday. No, I’m serious, we should toast to Viktoria. To all mothers: to the pain of labor that women undergo which men will never understand, because without that pain there’s not a single person at this table who would be here. To Viktoria, and to mothers! Gagimarjos!” or even truth in these toasts. At best they're poor attempts, at worst they make a mockery of the sacred act of toasting.

This toast might (it really shouldn't) pass for a humor-themed toast, but if the theme is to women, a toast like this does anything but celebrate women. Themes are meant to honor, not to mock.

Why?

If there's a common thread between all good toasting themes, it's gratitude for a thing, and honor given to its source.

Your goal is to take the theme presented by the Tamada and recognize the theme's relevance to oneself and others around the table. A toast on the theme of women which honors both Ted and his mother is an excellent move.

On the theme of authority

"Screw the government, screw taxes, vote Trump 2024!"

Why?

Political discourse, activism and advocacy have no place at the Supra. Everyone at the table will hold their own opinions on things, and there will be times when dialogue between differing opinions takes place. But intentional provocation and agenda-pushing is unacceptable.

"Tamada, you proposed a toast to authority, so I'd like to make a toast to my grandfather. He passed away two years ago, may his memory be eternal. I remember Grandpa telling me from time to time, "Respect your parents, one day you might be one!" His words taught me that trust and forgiveness are the best ways of honoring authority. But his kindness towards me taught me more about authority than any of his words. To my grandfather. Gagimarjos!"

Why?

When the Tamada proposes a toast, the theme is not yet fully developed. It hasn't been pondered by people at the table, expounded upon or fleshed out. By toasting on the theme, participants round out the meaning of the theme.

A toast like the one above offers an example to make sense of authority, and it may inspire someone else to toast to their grandfather or someone who inspired them in a similar way. By the end of the round, everyone at the table has a fuller appreciation for the theme, and a deeper understanding of the people around them.

On the theme of the unexpected

“One time I came home and couldn’t find my dog. My place isn’t that big so I started freaking out and calling his name. I heard him crawling out from under my low-lying bed frame. My cat little Rascal had been sick and was throwing up a lot. Buddy went under the bed to eat my cat’s vomit. Totally gross. It took a lot of effort for him to crawl under and crawl back out again. Gagimarjos!”

Why?

Aside from the toast being disgusting and inappropriate for a dining event, it fails to fully connect to the theme of the unexpected. Anecdotes are fine as long as they add to the theme in a meaningful way.

“Here’s a toast to the unexpected. It’s a short story that comes from China. There was a Chinese horse rancher who had seven beautiful horses. One day his finest horse ran away and all the man’s friends came to him to lament and console him. “What sadness! What tragedy!” they all said. “Maybe,” he replied. A week later, the horse returned, and with it came running seven more brilliant, wild horses. The villagers came to the man, “This is the best day of your life, what a blessing!” “Maybe,” the man replied. A week later, the man’s son was riding one of the wild horses only to fall off and break his leg. “What sadness! What tragedy!” his friends cried. “Maybe,” the man replied. A week later, the army conscription officer came to haul off all young men to war. The man’s son, being stuck in bed with a broken leg, could not of course join the war. “This is the best day of your life, what a blessing!” “Maybe,” the man replied. To the unexpected. Gagimarjos!”

Why?

A short story or parable that contains much meaning and ties into the theme makes for an excellent toast.

Common toasting themes:

- God
- The Mother of God
- Gratitude
- Peace
- Women
- Men
- Elders/parents
- The reason for the gathering
- Family
- Home
- Georgia
- Tradition
- Service
- New life, children, innocence
- Those who couldn’t make it
- Music
- Art
- Adventure
- Struggle
- Suffering
- Humor
- Missed connections
- The Merikipe
- The romantic chase

- Love
- Beauty
- Hope
- Friendship
- The departed

- Nation
- Libation
- The hands that prepared everything
- The Tamada (often the last toast, proposed by the participants)

FAQ

How long does a Supra last?

Some Supras can last a long time. But a good table doesn't have to be a marathon. Six toasts is probably too short, and a Supra that gets to sixteen is often more than four hours long. Each table is different, but you can plan on at least two hours.

What are the drinking rules? Does everyone have to drink?

A real Supra is a wine-only table. Again, this is the Georgian rule. We aren't Georgians, so if we want to bend that rule we can. But for Georgians wine is blood. No wine, no blood, no life, dead table. As for consuming liquor, a Supra is not designed to get people drunk. It is designed for fellowship. Because there are numerous toasts people can and do get drunk, but no one is ever forced to drink. The Tamada will direct the drinking and encourage people to participate, but this is not a fraternity party. The Supra is more like a poetry contest, and it should be treated with the same kind of honor and respect.

What should I wear?

In Georgia, the formality of the Supra depends on the significance of the event: for Supras following weddings, baptisms and funerals, the dress code will be quite formal. Remember, at a Supra all things are elevated: food is delectable and words are eloquent. The way one dresses, too, should be considered. At the very least, avoid wearing a bathing suit or athletic wear. But don't worry about going black tie, either (unless you want!).

What if I arrive late?

Not the end of the world! Georgians are notoriously some of the latest people in the world. It's best to arrive before the Supra begins, but life happens. Just be prepared to receive the classic toast to latecomers, a toast you'll hear at nearly every Supra.

WANT HELP CREATING A SUPRA?

Supra Dinner Society is here for you. We are a non-profit organization that sends Tamadas all over the United States to facilitate unforgettable Supra dinners.

How we help you host a Supra:

Step 1: Choose your occasion for a Supra. From casual friend gatherings to fancy rehearsal dinners, all kinds of events work great with a Supra.

Step 2: Reach out to us for a conversation, and we'll customize your Supra experience, together. Whether you need a venue, food, wine, or just a Tamada (toastmaster), we'll help plan the special day.

Step 3: Send out your unique invites -along with a helpful introduction to the Supra- to your guests.

Step 4: Gather together for the feast. Our Tamada will facilitate the toasting experience that will evoke all of life's meaningful moments.

Step 5: Reminisce about your Supra dinner for months after the event, cherishing your new memories and heightened friendships!

Whether you want help hosting a Supra, or if you are interested in becoming a Tamada with Supra Dinner Society, don't hesitate to reach out! And learn more at SupraDinner.com.

Contact Information

Daniel Padrnos
Supra Dinner Society Founder
daniel@supradinner.com
+1 719-502-9154